Certificate Course for the Department of Sociology

COURSE ON GENDER AND SEXUALITY

Introduction:

What does it mean to be a woman or a man? Or neither? How do gender and sexuality, those seemingly most personal and private of attributes, emerge from networks of power and social relations? This course introduces major concepts in the interdisciplinary field of gender and sexuality studies. We will analyze the ways in which gender, as an object of study and as a lived experience, intersects with class, race, and ability, and will examine the relation between gender, sexuality and power in literary, philosophical, political and medical discourses.

This paper presents theory and research on gender and sexuality as well as on knowledge production in this area. It provides a unique lens for the study of gender, sex, and sexuality as social phenomena, and can help us to understand the ways through which humans create this hierarchies.

Purpose of the paper:

The paper aims to understand the nature of gender inequality, and examines women's social roles, experiences, and interests. While generally providing a critique of social relations, much of feminist theory also focuses on analyzing gender inequality and the promotion of women's interests.

Interdisciplinary Certificate Course

Department of Sociology

Course Name: HUMAN POLITICAL AND SOCIAL SCIENCES

Duration: 32 Hours

Eligibility: Students from all Semesters

Course Overview:

The Interdisciplinary Social Sciences program is designed to provide an interdisciplinary integration of the social sciences for students who are interested in a holistic educational experience. The program offers an opportunity to design a rigorous course of study geared toward individual needs and interests that emphasizes critical analysis of social issues through a variety of paradigms and perspectives.

The course promotes an interdisciplinary orientation to the social sciences.

Module 1:

▪ Social Anthropology

This module investigates 'what it is to be human' by studying social and cultural diversity – how people live, think and relate to each other around the world.

Topics:

1.1- Society Environment and Place

1.2- Endangered Cultures

Module 2

Politics and International Relations

This course explores politics within and between countries, covering issues from human rights and democracy to financial crises and international conflict.

2.1 Politics and Policy in Practice

2.2 Global Communications, Citizens and Cultural Politics.

Module 3

Comparative and Historical Sociology

Studying history and thinking historically have been sources of inspirations for sociologists of theory building and theory elaboration, since the days of Max Weber. Great thinkers in sociology have always combined their analysis of contemporary societies with that of history. This course gives an introduction to historical approaches in contemporary sociology.

The module deals with problems of modernization and social change, globalization trends and influences, integration and disintegration processes, the relationship of continuity and discontinuity, religious and cultural pluralism, linking the global to the local, the identification of the chances and risks of social development, the analysis of conflict situations and the possibility of overcoming them. The need for understanding of all of these issues invokes the need for the development of adequate theoretical and methodological approaches.

3.1 Modernisation, Globalisation and their Role in the Contemporary Society

3.2 Historical Sociology and Contemporary Social Change

Module 4:

Basic Research Methods

This module will help students to:

- Turn substantive interests into specific and testable research questions;
- Understand basic qualitative and quantitative research methods;

- Know the basic elements of different methodological approaches and understand their merits and limitations;
- Identify an appropriate method to match a research question;
- Understand and meet the ethical standards for conducting research with humans;
- Develop skills for reading, understanding, and critically thinking about empirical research using qualitative and quantitative methods.

4.1 Methods and Statistics in Social Sciences

4.2 A brief Understanding of Qualitative and Quantitative Research Methods

4.3 Survey Data Collection and Analytics

4.4 Writing Dissertation

Certificate Course by the Department of Political Science and Philosophy

Course Title: Exploring the Vedas: Insights into Ancient Wisdom and Contemporary Relevance

Course Description:

The Department of Political Science and Philosophy at Kultali Dr B R Ambedkar College has forth a value-added course titled “Exploring the Vedas: Insights into Ancient Wisdom and Contemporary Relevance” for interested undergraduate students. This course aims to introduce students to the rich heritage of Vedic literature, exploring its philosophical, political, and social dimensions while examining its relevance in the modern world.

DURATION: 32 HOURS

ELIGIBILITY: Undergraduate Students from various Subjects enrolled in our College.

Course Objectives:

- Introduce students to the fundamental texts of the Vedas and their significance in Indian culture and philosophy.
- Analyze the political and social structures depicted in Vedic literature and their implications for contemporary governance and societal organization.
- Explore the philosophical concepts embedded in the Vedas, such as dharma, karma, and the nature of reality, and their relevance to ethical and moral dilemmas in the present-day world.
- Examine the role of Vedic thought in shaping historical and contemporary political ideologies and movements.
- Foster critical thinking and analytical skills through engagement with primary Vedic texts and secondary scholarly literature.
- Encourage interdisciplinary perspectives by integrating insights from political science, philosophy, history, and religious studies.

Course Structure:

Introduction to Vedic Literature: Overview of the Vedas, their classification, historical context, and transmission.

Vedic Political Thought: Examination of political concepts and governance structures in Vedic texts, including kingship, sovereignty, and justice.

Philosophical Foundations: Exploration of key philosophical ideas in the Vedas, such as cosmology, metaphysics, and moral philosophy.

Vedic Ethics and Society: Analysis of ethical principles and social norms derived from Vedic literature, with a focus on their applicability in contemporary society.

Vedic Influence on Politics and Culture: Study of historical instances and contemporary movements influenced by Vedic thought, including Hindu nationalism and environmental activism.

Contemporary Relevance: Discussion of how Vedic insights can inform contemporary debates on issues such as environmental sustainability, social justice, and religious pluralism.

Assessment:

Students' understanding of the course material will be assessed through participation in discussions, written assignments, quizzes, and a final research project. Evaluation criteria will include critical analysis, coherence of arguments, and demonstration of interdisciplinary understanding.

By the end of this course, students will gain a nuanced understanding of Vedic literature and its relevance to contemporary political and philosophical discourse, thereby enriching their academic pursuits and fostering a deeper appreciation for India's cultural heritage.
